Distinguished Visitor Here.

Mrs. James L. Bradford, wife of Captain Bradford, of New Orelans, is spending ten days in the city with Mrs. R. L. Hunter, at 215 East Franklin Street.

Mrs. Bradford, who is a very handsome and charming woman, has won no small place for her name in the world of letters. She is the author of a life of Audubon, the great bird lover and naturalist, and the proceeds of this work were devoted entirely to the erection of a monument in Audubon Park, New Orleans, which monument was de-New Orleans, which monument was de-New Origans, which monument was designed by Edward V. Valentine, of Richmond. Mrs. Bradford was among the distinguished guests noted at the Woman's Club tea Monday afternoon and is most pleasantly remembered in club circles, since she lectured there on Audubon, two seasons ago.

The bride descended the stairway with her father, who gave her away. Miss Neille Frances Lee was her sister's maid of honor, and her gown was of pale retlow accordion-platted chiffon. She carried an armful of yellow roses. Philip S. A modest amount of good feeling and graciousness makes it impossible for one to be less than charming,
It is best to measure your courtesy strictly if you are sure you haven't enough to go around.

What we find charming in others is delicacy and consideration shown in little things. Not to offend in look and mamer is a great deal to say of man or woman, and we ought to be equal to this—out of regard for others, if not for qurselves.

Remember: There is nothing more modest and unselfish than the attempt of some delightful woman to be agree-the medicines prescribed.

In the first place, only a well-qualified doctor is capable of couching his prescription in Latin; many do not even attempt it, but use a sort of cabalistic language, which the luckless pharmacist is expected to divine by means of deduction. But how about prescribing for the Latin scholar, who may be more familiar with the language than is the doctor himself? Never is the doctor more particular in his choice of forms than when prescribing for the educated patient.

Latin is Good the World Around.

Why do lawyers, chemists, botanists

Latin Is Good the World Around.

Why do lawyers, chemists, botanists and scientific people in general employ so much Latin? Because Latin holds good the world around. It is an international language for use when risk of misunderstandings would arise if translated texts were relied upon. For instance, the word cure in America means to heal, to rid the body of a disease, while in Germany the word cure means simply the treatment. A German physician may "cure" his patient every day until the patient dies. A German cure is therefore not necessarily a cure in America. This fact has led astray more than one victim of medicine "made in Germany."

The legal standard for the strength and purity of drugs is the Pharmacopoeia. This book, authorized by the government and prescribed as the standard by law, describes what the proper standard for each medicine shall be. The names are all in Latin, Hence the doctor uses the legal, efficial name for the medicine he orders for the patient.

"Any Fool Can Try It."

Tany Fool Cas Try It.

If a druggist receives a prescription which is not written in official Latin, and accidentally gives the patient the wrong medicine, some one is certainly culpable for the mistake, and a confusion arising from variable interpretations of common names of drugs is often the cause of such a mistake. If the doctor's language is faulty he is responsible; if the prescription is carefully written in proper form, then the doctor cannot be blamed.

We must admit, however, that most physicians do desire to keep the patient in ignorance of what he is taking, and for this reason: Self-medication is rampant everywhere. No fool but will gladly play the part of his own or another's doctor. A prescription, if in plain English, invites the distribution of coples by unintelligent persons. A lot of shallow-minded people still imagine what cures the tailor's "stomach complaint" may come from his pinched appendix and the blacksmith's from a hardened liver.

Questions and Answers.

Young Mother inquires: (1) Does the use of small daily quantities of choice ale or porter tend to help a nursing mother? (2) What foods should a nursing mother avoid?

Reply: (1) No; it tends to diminish the period of lactation. (2) Avoid only such foods as you have found to disagree with you. Any food which you can digest is good for the baby. No particular variety of food affects the breast milk in any way.

R. L. A. writes: Do you think it is constitutional to enforce compulsory vaccination?

Reply: I do, provided it is enforced on every one. I do not when it is enforced only upon a class. However, the United States Supreme Court has held that a statute compelling vaccination is constitutional (Jacobson vs. Mass., 197 U.S., 11). So what's the use, unless you believe in the occasional recall of judicial decisions?

R. G. S. writes: A magazine writer states that an eminent English physician recommends paratin oil to people suffering from constipation and autointoxication. It is claimed that if parafin oil were daily taken the health of the human race would be greatly improved. What is your opinion of it? Reply: Parafin oil (pétroleum oil, Russian oil, and a dozen other names for the same thing) is a mild, larmless laxative. As to the human race, we think the poor race has suffered as much harm as good from laxatives.

L. W. B. asks: What is the proper strength of carbolic acid solution for use in erythema or hives to relieve itching?
Reply: For local or occasional ap-

Reply: For local or occasional ap-plication a 1 per cent solution—one part of the standard 5 per cent solu-tion, mixed with four parts of water. For general sponging or repeated ap-plication, it is wise to use it in weak-er solution—half of 1 per cent.

The Trey O'Hearts

The battle was still in suspense when, alighting with every precaution to avoid unusual noise, the party left its horses "hitched to the ground" and entered the hotel.

Two sentences exchanged between Hopl Jim and a blear-eyed fellow whom he roused from sodden slumbers be-hind the bar sealed their confidence with conviction; the three fugitives were in fact guests of the house, accu-pying two of the three rooms that com-posed its upper story.

In the rush that followed up the narrow stairway, Judith led with such spirit that not even Marrophat sus-pected her revolver was poised solely with intent to shoot from his hand his own revolver the instant he leveled it at a human target.

Closed and locked doors confronted them; and their summons educed no response; while the first door, when broken in by a whole-souled kick, discovered nothing more astisfactory than an empty room, its bed bearing the imprint of a woman's body, but that woman sone. man gone.

From the one window, looking down the side of the house, Texas announced that the woman had not escaped by jumping out.

So it seemed that the three must have had warning of their arrival, after all; and presumably were now herded to-gether in the adjoining room, which looked out over the verandah roof, waiting in fear and trembling for the assault that must soon come—and in fact immediately did.

But it met with more stubborn resistance than had been anticipated. The door had been barricaded from within—reinforced by furniture placed against it. Four minutes and the united efforts of four men (including the bleary loafer of the barroom) were required to overcome its inert resistance. But even when it was down, the room was found to be as empty as the first.

Only the fingers of two hands grip-ping the edge of the verandah roof showed the way the fugitives had flown; and these vanished instantly as flown; and these vanished instantly as the room was invaded.

Followed a swift rush of hoofs down the dusty street, and a chorus of blasphemy in the hotel hallway: for Judith had headed the concerted rush for the staircase and contrived to block it for a full half-minute by pretending to stumble and twist her ankle.

In spite of that alleged injury, she never limped, and wasn't a yard behind the first who broke from the hotel to the open, nor yet appreciably behind him in vaulting to saddle.

Well up the road a cloud of smoky dust half obscured the shapes of three who rode for their very lives.

The pursuit was off in a twinkling and well bunched—Marrophat's mount leading by a nose, Judith second, Hopi Jim and Texas but little in the rear.

Jim and Texas but little in the rear.
And in the first rush they seemed to gain; moment by moment they drew up on the flying cloud of dust.
Then that happened which brought Judith's neart into her mouth. One of the horses ridden by the three stumbled and fell, wallowing in the roadway in such wise that its rider must have been crushed but for miraculous luck and agility.
For before she could see whose horse it was, while still she feared the rider

For before she could see whose horse it was, while still she feared the rider might have been Alan, a puff of wind whipped the curtain of dust aside and showed the figure of a woman standing in the roadway a few feet distant from the fallen horse—Rose, who had somehow managed to fall upon her feet, waiting with her bright face of confidence for Alan to overtake her.

And Alan, who, it appeared, had been riding well to the rear, was abreast her in a flash.
